Optical networks include various network elements, such as routers, switches, add-drop multiplexers, and the like. If the next 500 drivers who enter the rookie test are anything to go by,

British motorsport is on the way to at least maintaining its current standard of performance. The Sutton and Mitcham-based squad welcomes its first car to its 200-plus-strong driver development pipeline on Thursday. Indeed, according to The Sunday Times' 'Goodwood Bud' column, the next three drivers taking on the three-day test in the Maserati GranCorsa are Simon Rimmer, son of present Aston Martin factory driver Guy, and two brothers, Will and Liam Wright, both of whom are former McLaren F1 test drivers and current F1 race and support drivers. Joining them on the driving roster in the event – which is not officially open to the public – is Regazzoni Tec Motorsport's Martin Collard, who was recently signed to race for the Italian carmaker in its FIA World Endurance Championship (WEC) effort this year. As one of just two privateer WEC teams, Scuderia Ena has yet to announce its driver lineup for its debut season, but a replacement for Nick Heidfeld is expected to be announced in due course. The LMP1 squad has been using the GranCorsa to undertake training and development work on the car. "There are 15 engineers [working with the race team] to develop this car," said Marco Mapelli, Ena Team Manager. "For a first year of a new car, working on the LMP1, we have very important decisions to make." A four-hour test will be conducted on Thursday in France, followed by two-hour shakedown runs the following day in Italy. On Friday, the team will spend two days of testing, testing the car's aerodynamics and suspension while also preparing it for the race. The race itself takes place on 22-24 June in Silverstone. Porsche – as the official LMP1 supplier to the FIA World Endurance Championship – is in a unique position to benefit from this test. It seems that, like Le Mans 24 Hours winner and Audi Sport director of vehicle development Allan McNish, the German marque is planning to place the LMP1 model on the top-tier GTE Pro grid in WEC next year. Commenting on the latest news, Mapelli said: "The pace of the car during the test will be
